Emma's First Film

Emma was walking in Hyde Park during the British Summer Time Festival when she saw a group of children. They were playing with a big red balloon while their families were listening to live music and watching street performances. Suddenly, the wind blew the balloon away, and the children ran after it, laughing.

Emma had her camera with her and decided to film the moment. At home, Emma watched her video. It looked fun and exciting, but she wanted to make it better. She added a well-known British pop tune and slow motion to show the balloon flying slowly in the sky. The next day, Emma showed the video to her best friend, Jake.

“Wow! This looks like a real movie!” he said.

Emma felt proud. She started making more videos: her grandmother having afternoon tea at 5 pm, her brother skateboarding and her neighbour gardening.

One month later, her school had a short film contest about British culture. Emma worked hard and made a new video about street performances in Covent Garden. When the teacher said her name, Emma was surprised. She smiled and walked to the stage to get her prize. She was the winner!

That day, Emma knew what she wanted to do in the future. She wanted to be a filmmaker!
